Mis-confusion

Not to be confused with Confucius or Confusion (disambiguation)

Mis-confusion is derived from the word confused. It is an adjective, verb, noun, and sometimes a pronoun.

 History

It word "mis-confusion" was created on February 26th by Ricardo Belmontez and company through a series of test sentences which proved it could sufficiently be used in several sentences to express almost every human and non-human emotion.

 Usage

The word has many uses but is subsequently used to describe yourself being confused.

Case 1

I was under mis-confusion when I halted the student from completing the exam.

Case 2

The mis-confused students failed to take the test because of mis-confusion with the test date.

 Similar Words

Mis-screwed